wind quintet (flute, oboe, clarinet, horn and bassoon) and a string quartet (violin, viola, cello, double bass). Captivating the personality of each instrument, it displays a high variety of colours and the great imagination of the composer.

With the simple addition of the second violin to the group we obtain a decet. The French composer Theodore Dubois kept to the more traditional romantic style, unlike many of his contemporaries that overshadowed his fame. He also wrote a fair amount of sacred music and is one of the few composers that has written for this specific combination of ten instruments.
