Ana Moura, one of the most successful fado singers of her generation and currently the most popular Portuguese singer. There is no other voice like that of Ana Moura in Portugal: a voice which elegantly flirts with other genres, extending the range of Portuguese music and its connections in a very personal manner. An immediate spark, an emotional outburst relentlessly addressed to the listener’s heart.
With a million copies of her six published records, collaborations with musical legends such as Prince, Rolling Stones, Caetano Veloso, Gilberto Gil and Herbie Hankock, and acknowledgements including two Golden Globes (Portugal), two Amalia awards (acknowledging the merit of those who contribute every year to keep the grandeur of fado alive) and a nomination to the Songlines Music Awards (United Kingdom) in the category for Best Artist. Even if her personal and musical restlessness takes her to other territories, as on this occasion, Ana Moura assures "I can sing anything, but my soul will always be fado in everything I do".
